

Data captured

The data captured was from the first year students of Akwa-Ibom State University, Faculty of Arts, which has five departments. These include the Department of English, Department of History, Department of Performing Arts, Departments of Religion and Cultural Studies, Department of Philosophy.

Result for common courses offered in the faculty

From the report gathered, it was found that General study courses (Use of English (GSS 101), Use of English (GSS 102), Nigerian People and Culture (GSS 112)), were the common courses amongst 5 departments. Computer Application (GSS 122) and Introduction to Computer studies were not offered in the department of History. Making it to be four departments offering the course alone.

How the data was captured

This data was captured primarily from the current students in the faculty of arts. It was done by interviewing a first year student from the faculty who had to help me connect with other students in various departments in the faculty, because the faculty information could not be gotten from the university portal.

Justification To The Approach

This approach was adopted , because it was quite difficult to get this information secondarily from the university portal. And having to use current students was better because they are the ones doing these courses. So if a new course has been added to the curriculum, they will be in the right position to tell.

Challenges Experienced

1. Inability to get the information needed from the university portal
2. Students being afraid of divulging information about their courses
3. Students are not readily available to get information from them quickly.
